This chapter identifies theoretical questions relevant to developing a research agenda for Undergraduate Research in Religious Studies. It gives attention to how Undergraduate Research is situated in the context of the student's academic work by addressing the relation of Undergraduate Research to previous and future course work, the construction of learning goals, the development of a research agenda and product, and process and product assessment for faculty and student.